FINDLAW DAILY OPINION SUMMARIES U.S. 1ST CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS

FAMILY LAW, INTERNATIONAL LAW

Sanchez Londono v. Gonzalez, No. 13-2531

The district court's denial of Mother's petition filed pursuant to the Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction, as implemented by the International Child Abduction Remedies Act, is affirmed, where the district court did not err in finding that no wrongful retention of the child occurred under the Hague Convention because the United States was the child's place of habitual residence.

CLASS ACTIONS, HEALTH LAW, INJURY & TORT LAW

Genereux v. Raytheon Company, No. 13-1921

Summary judgment in favor of defendant in a putative class action alleging that defendant endangered the health of the plaintiffs and others similarly situated by negligently exposing them to beryllium used in the manufacturing process at defendant's plant, is affirmed, where: 1) the record discloses no evidence that any plaintiff, named or unnamed, in either the employee class or the take-home class, has as yet developed beryllium sensitization (BeS), so plaintiffs have not carried their burden of producing evidence sufficient to preclude summary judgment; and 2) a cause of action for medical monitoring under Massachusetts law requires a showing of subcellular or other physiological change, and plaintiffs' counsel was clear in the proceedings below that he was not challenging that requirement in this proceeding.
